As with any solution, modular cleanroom is not the be-all-end-all solution to all cleanroom design problems. Different applications for cleanroom modular solutions have different design and operation requirements, and therefore different performance attributes. As mentioned above, modular constructions are simply a space saving alternative for standard cleanrooms. They are designed and constructed for a specific purpose and are only compatible with that purpose. If you are considering the use of modular cleanroom, be sure to understand the features and performance attributes of the different modules and the cleaning strategies and operation requirements. Often, modular cleanrooms are part of a system-wide cleanroom design and operation strategy, which requires a dedicated cleanroom engineer and support staff for the cleanroom design and daily operation. Sharing a modular design is like sharing a home. Some people like the comforts and conveniences of a typical home, while others prefer the ability to be independent or self-sufficient. Understanding how you and your users will interact with the modular cleanroom is a good starting point in the planning process. Both the anticipated user group and the actual users must be considered when designing and planning the use of a modular cleanroom.
