Berlin dies as a result of an accident, Adolphe Clough is shocked to find that Eleanor is far more dead than alive. He enters his flat, having lost all memory of the night. He finds, covered in blood, a body that he assumes is Eleanor. Eleanor is aware that she is dead, living among the living in a strange state. When she tries to tell her son the bad news, she cannot describe how she is dead because she is living. With help from Clough, she pretends to be alive. As she prepares to leave the flat and find Adolphe, she becomes aware that there are men searching for her and where they will find her. Crazy with grief and no memory of what has happened, Adolphe desperately searches for Eleanor. See more See less One of the earliest feature films I saw at the cinema was certainly called Berlin – Death in Autumn. It was a German film. I knew I'd seen it before. I never saw it again. Though I don't remember that it came to be subtitled, I know it was originally in English and I gather that that it was later re-subtitled in German. Now I remember. Berlin, Death in Autumn is a contemporary British thriller. That's a very good fit. There are no discernible secrets – everything is on the surface. The story is about two men who meet in a night club. The plot is a simpler version of Vert 3da54e8ca3
