AI development of players may also be improved in certain areas of the game, including more intelligent spacing and body positioning, as well as faster and more accurate ball-touch controls. New animations have been added to create a more dynamic and intuitive movement system. FIFA 22's ball physics also have been improved, which will make for a more realistic ball-control feel. To finish the ball physics improvements, player weight and momentum have been analyzed and refined, with both maximum velocity and acceleration also improved. The new hypermotion technology also includes the introduction of the "Pitch React" system. This new system allows for pitch animations to be improved and greater control of player movement and game flow. There are several changes to the system, which will be felt throughout FIFA 22. For example, players will now "follow-through" on passes to create more fluid movement. In addition to these new systems, one of the biggest additions to FIFA 22 is the complete removal of distance penalties. While this does mean that there is no longer a need for distance-based team tactics, it also allows referees to give more fouls or cards (e.g. handball, offside, etc.) as players run into each other and put themselves into physically poor positions to score. FIFA 22 was produced by SEGA and published by Electronic Arts. The game will be available in stores on September 29th. I am trying to understand the logic behind the hash map in Java. I have a Java Hash Map of type custom class and each instance of a class is a key in a hash map. When I tried to do this, I was getting an error saying that my class was not equal to hashCode of any instance of the class. I later found out that it's because I had to use the hash code function and compare them in an if statement. Since using the object in hash map is the only way of accessing it's member variables such as the size of a vector, what is the reason behind this? A: There is no reason to have an
